Book Title: Little Red Riding Hood

The setting is important to the story because the woods are dangerous for a little girl to be by herself. The woods are dangerous because it is dark, spooky, and there is nobody to protect her. The big bad wolf tricked Little Red Riding Hood to pick up flowers so he could make it to her grandmother's house first. The story might be different if the setting changed from woods to a park because a park is not a dangerous place. There would be kids and parents playing so the wolf would not be able to get her alone. Also it will not be spooky and dark.
