The School is prohibited from purchasing food products that are either: (1) misbranded as a meat product or an egg product or (2) a cultivated-protein food product.

A food product is considered a misbranded meat product if all of the following apply:

- (1) The food is a manufactured-protein food product or the food contains a manufactured-protein food product;
- (2) The food is offered for sale by a food processing establishment;
- (3) A label that is part of or placed on the package or other container storing the manufactured-protein food product includes an identifying meat term; and
- (4) The label that is part of or placed on the package or other container storing the manufactured-protein food product does not contain a conspicuous and prominent qualifying meat term in close proximity to the identifying meat term.

A food product is considered a misbranded egg product if all of the following apply:

- (1) The food is a fabricated-egg product or the food contains a fabricated-egg product;
- (2) The food is offered for sale or sold by a food processing establishment;
- (3) A label that is part of or placed on the package or other container storing the food includes an identifying egg term; and
- (4) The label that is part of or placed on the package or other container storing the food does not contain a conspicuous and prominent qualifying egg term in close proximity to an identifying egg term.

A food is considered a cultivated-protein food product if the product has one or more sensory attributes that resemble a type of tissue originating from an agricultural food animal, but that, in lieu of being derived from meat processing, is derived from manufacturing cells in which one or more stem cells are initially isolated from an agricultural food animal, are grown in vitro, and may be manipulated, as part of a manufacturing operation.
